The remote connection: the Comp/Set telecommunications option.

With recent developments in electronic data transmission, it is now possible to receive digital information from just about anywhere over ordinary telephone lines. Information stored in a computer memory at one location can be transmitted at high speeds to a remote location thousands of miles away.

Typesetting by telephone.
Through the use of the innovative Comp/Set telecommunications option, you can take advantage of virtually instant electronic communications to expand the productivity of your Comp/Set phototypesetting system.

Copy can be received from compatible devices such as word processors and computers.

For example, copy that has been input and edited on a word processor in a business office can be transmitted at up to 120 characters per second directly into the Comp/Set phototypesetter in another department, or to a printer or typesetter across town or across the country.

Direct input to your Comp/Set phototypesetter from remote locations expands the productivity and efficiency of your typesetting operations. There is no re-keyboarding, no time lost for delivery of manuscript.
